Life Lessons from the playing field

The five S's of sports training are: stamina, speed, strength, skill, and spirit; but the greatest of these is spirit.

-- Ken Doherty

To learn to live, one has to learn to play- play in the spirit of the game. The rewards of the game go beyond winning. The playing field prepares you for life like no classroom can. More than anything, you learn early enough that life is not a level playing field. It isn't always fair.

You learn to look critically at failure, beyond disappointment. You learn to go through life better as you stop to introspect and become wiser in hindsight.

The sporting world is full of living examples of stars who returned to success and glory after various setbacks in their careers. These real life stories bring hope- that if they have done it, you can do it too.

The sporting world rewards discipline always. One may be gifted with talent and yet the combination of talent and discipline is what helps you exceed all expectations.

The sports facilities at DPS Bangalore East offers something to each member. I hope to see every member of the DPS family making the most of it- whether to compete or for the sheer joy of participation.

With Best Wishes
